

An introduction to resurgence in quantum theory

Marcos Mariño

University of Geneva

Mercredi 28 Septembre 2022 à 14:00

LPENS – L363, 24 rue Lhomond

Résumé

In quantum theory, we often calculate observables approximately by using perturbative series in a small parameter. These series are typically factorially divergent, so we need to make sense of them. The theory of resurgence gives a general framework to do this, and upgrades perturbative series to so-called trans-series, which include exponentially small corrections and make it possible to incorporate non-perturbative physics in a systematic way. Many non-perturbative techniques in quantum theory (like instanton calculus and renormalon physics) are in fact particular examples of this general framework. In these lectures I will give an introduction to resurgence with a focus on applications to quantum theory. After introducing some elementary resurgent technology, I will discuss resurgence in one-dimensional quantum mechanics, and then proceed to discuss what is known about the resurgent structure of quantum field theory.